Representatives from several Combat Center departments hosted the Combat Center's first Behavioral Health Branch Informational Drug Summit, as part of the Drug Demand Reduction Program, at the Officer's Club, Tuesday.

The informational summit consisted of a series of classes sponsored by Marine Corps Community Services by representatives from the Sexual Assault Prevention and Response program, Substance Abuse Control Office, Criminal Investigation Department, Legal Services Support Team, and Navy Criminal Investigative Services, which showcased drug trends and how the Combat Center is using its departments to collaborate with law enforcement and combat illegal drug use. "This is the first time the behavioral health branch has worked directly with law enforcement and the legal department to pull resources together and compare data," said Joven Caguioa, representative, Drug Demand Reduction Program, Marine Corps Community Services. "Our goal is to reduce demand for drugs on this installation through education and outreach."

The event was a collaborative effort from all departments involved, which offered educational materials like booklets, pamphlets, notebooks and other resources Marines and sailors could take back to their units.

"What I found useful was the actual process; what should actually be done when you find out a Marine has tested positive for illegal drugs and what steps should be taken afterward from CID and legal's [standpoint]," said Staff Sgt. Waldo Walden, mess chief, 7th Marine Regiment.

Although the focus of the summit was illegal drug use, the event offered information on behavioral health, stress and sexual assault prevention.

"Believe it or not, if there is a sexual assault or domestic violence report, drug or alcohol abuse is usually involved," Caguioa said. "Marines or sailors who are having a hard time dealing with a high-stress environment can sometimes use drugs or alcohol as a coping mechanism as well. So all of the departments working together for this event relate to each other in some way and the information they provide is important for units to know."

The Summit began with a presentation by Caguioa detailing what the Combat Center does to deter Marines from drug use.

"Urinalysis is the biggest deterrent," Caguioa said. "When Marines know after they come back from a 96-hour liberty period or vacation they're going to be tested; it's less likely they will use illegal drug substances."

Agents with CID discussed common mistakes commanders and senior enlisted advisors make when they find out a Marine or sailor has tested positive for drug use. Agents advised leaders to not divulge any information to the service member who tested positive until CID becomes involved. This allows agents to perform an efficient investigation of the user.

"What we want from the units is to have the Marine be surprised by the time he sees us," said agent Peterson, CID. "If See Summit pg. A7

'Gateway to Everest' receives U.S. aid

STORY BY LANCE CPL. MANDALINE HATCH

Deployed U.S. Military members and a North Carolina faith-based organization provided earthquake disaster relief supplies to Nepalese villagers in Dolakha District, Saturday and Sunday.

Joint Task Force 505, the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) and Samaritan's Purse worked together to deliver donated supplies to Jiri village using Marine Corps MV-22B Osprey Tiltrotor aircraft during relief efforts in Nepal after two devastating earthquakes.

Jiri - known as the "Gateway to Mt. Everest" - is located in Northeast Nepal and sits at 6,250 feet. Already suffering from the first earthquake on April 25, the citizens of Jiri found themselves at the epicenter of a second earthquake on May 12. Samaritan's Purse aid workers were on the ground when the second quake struck. Nepalese local officials reached out to the aid organization and asked them to help their 1,490 households.

"Because we were working here already and nobody else was, there weren't a lot of people to take anything out there," said Ken Isaacs, Samaritan's Purse vice president of programs and government relations.

Samaritan's Purse coordinated with the United Nations and USAID, who, as the lead U.S. relief agency in the country, verified the requirement with the Government of Nepal and then tasked JTF 505 with their unique military capabilities to deliver the needed supplies from Tribhuvan International Airport using MV-22B Ospreys from Marine Medium Tiltrotor Squadron 262.

Over a two day period flying more than 10 sorties, the squadron delivered roughly 33,600 pounds of plastic sheeting and non-food items to the village so Samaritan's Purse could distribute to the people. They successfully transported hundreds of rolls of plastic sheets, measuring at 100 feet long and 20 feet wide each to the Nepalese people.

Isaacs said he thinks the most important thing needed right now in Nepal is the plastic sheeting due to monsoon season right around the corner.

"Rain is coming, people need to stay dry," he said. "If they don't stay dry, they're going to get cold. If they get cold, they're going to get sick, and if they're sick, they won't be able to rebuild."

The rolls of plastic sheets will protect nearly a See Aid pg. A7

LAV's wet their wheels in Yuma

MCAS YUMA, Ariz. – Traversing a river is no problem for amphibious Light Armored Vehicles (LAVs) if drivers are well-versed in the abilities of the machine. With that in mind, Company A (rein), 3rd Light Armored Infantry Battalion (Co. A, 3rd LAI Bn.) of the 7th Marines Expeditionary Brigade from the Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center (MCAGCC) trekked over 220 miles to the Yuma Proving Grounds (YPG) to undertake a variety of training missions designed to build confidence and familiarize drivers with the reality of amphibious driving. The Company arrived at YPG April 25, and immediately began to train. With only three days to train, there was no time to waste. Three missions had been laid down for the Marines to accomplish. "The primary purpose of our training out here is to put the vehicles in the water," said Capt. Joe Holt, company commander.

"We don't get a chance to so that on a regular basis at Twentynine Palms because we're so far away from any sizable body of water." A second mission was to conduct driver mobility course on YPG's many off-road tracks. These training missions were to teach the Marines how to handle the LAV over rugged and muddy terrain. The third mission was simply to maintain high frequency radio communication with MCAGCC, at the outer edge of the LAV's radio range. Night training was also conducted, but was not considered one of the primary missions, according to 2ndLt. Thomas L. Langlois, platoon commander. Seventeen of the 26 LAVs in the company deployed and were accompanied by about 92 Marines. Of the deployed Marines, there were only approximately 12 had amphibious experience. "I'm glad we could give the vehicles a workout, they performed well," said Holt. "This vehicle represents a tremendous capability in the Marines Corps with its mobility and firepower assets. We can provide an awful lot of information to the regimental commander in a tactical environment, deal with the bad guys and relay the information back." The LAVs, eight wheeled vehicles made by the general motors of Canada, can exceed 60 mph on land and seven mph in the water. Its body style adapts to many different uses. LAVs are designed to accomplish a variety of missions such as reconnaissance of a proposed battle site, transporting troops, and providing prep fires or fire support. The company also deployed here last year with over 600 Marines from the battalion. During the course of the last year, however, the battalion moved to camp Schwab, Okinawa with a company at Camp Fuji, Japan while Company A is at MCAGCC.

WHAT I'VE LEARNED

Jeffery RAYNOR

Alvin, Tx. Petty Officer 2nd Class, religious program specialist, 1st Tank Battalion

Raynor has been in the Navy for eight years and enjoys paintball, shooting guns and fishing. He is currently the religious program specialist for 1st Tank Battalion.

> Growing up, my friends and brother played paintball. I found it interesting so I bought an inexpensive gun and started playing with them.

> I have been playing paintball on and off for about five years, I picked it back up when I was stationed in Japan.

> Paintball gets me out and doing something. It is good cardio running around everywhere and I get to hang out with some friends at the same time.

> When I moved from Fort Hood, Texas, to Alvin, Texas, we played in pastures with paintball bunkers set up and that is when I decided to buy more durable paintball guns.

> I enjoy going out and shooting guns too. The main weapons I use are my 12-gauge shotgun, my AR-15, and a Smith and Weston .40 caliber handgun. I'm saving up for my next gun which is an M1911 handgun.

> I started shooting while I lived in Southeast Texas. It was fun to see if I can shoot more accurate than my friends.

> I also enjoy fishing when I have the opportunity. That hobby has to wait for later though because there are not a lot of places to go around here.

> I joined the Navy because I wanted travel and I wanted to further my education. In my small town, jobs were hard to get and maintain.

> I have had the opportunity, to go to a lot of places since joining the Navy like: Japan, Quantico, Va., Thailand, Australia, and Korea to name a few.

> I came into the Navy undesignated which is not having a specific job. I became a religious program specialist and I enjoy doing this job.

> I have been in the Navy for 8 years. In two years my contract will be up again. I'm at the point where I would be fine re-enlisting again. It goes by quicker than you expect.

> My job is to integrate with the Marines and see how they are doing for the command. I get to go to the ranges with them and I get to know them.

> The Marines I work with are awesome and they are eager to move forward.

> When I go around checking on the different sections, I can see that these Marines care about each other and are willing to improve and learn. It's a great thing to see.

Safety Fair teaches, entertains students

Cortez, military working dog, Provost Marshal's Office, bites Staff Sgt. Charles Hardesty, kennel master, PMO, during a demonstration at the Marine Corps Communication and Electronics School Safety Fair at the MCCES barracks, May 15. The event was held to bring awareness to how Marines can be safe during the "101 Days of Summer."

STORY AND PHOTOS BY LANCE CPL. THOMAS MUDD

Marine Corps Communication-Electronics School representatives held their biannual Safety Fair at the MCCES barracks parking lot, May 15.

Approximately 3,000 Marines took the opportunity to learn about safety in an entertaining environment.

"I put this on for my Marines because they need to learn about safety," said Retired Lt. Col. Joice Teters, director of safety, MCCES. "[They can] learn without looking at a power point, then they are able to enjoy themselves while learning what they need to know."

A variety of personnel operated booths from several organizations such as the Substance Abuse Control Office, Provost Marshal's Office K9 unit and representatives from around the local community. The representatives taught the Marines where they can go for entertainment while staying in a safe environment and how to avoid dangerous situations throughout the summer months.

"We were able to get [representatives] from SACO, who used 'beer goggles' to show how alcohol affects your motor skills, as well as a fencing club, and tattoo safety booth from the local community," said Lt. Col. Speros Koumparakis, commanding officer, Communications Training Battalion, MCCES. "The event showed how to be safe while still having an entertaining time."

MCCES held the event to prepare for "101 Days of Summer," a Marine Corps wide installation initiative to increase safety during the summer months.

"During that time, we want Marines to be more vigilant and keep safety in mind," Koumparakis said. "Marines are not the only people who try to have fun during the summer."

Alongside the fencing club and PMO booths, there were booths from motorcycle stunt riders, local law enforcement, and other agencies from the community. The Marines learned how alcohol affects their motor skills by running a small course in pedal cars while wearing beer goggles. They learned about a few basic fencing techniques from the Twentynine Palms Fencing Club as well as safety information from booths from local law enforcement and the Combat Center Fire Department.

"We have about 30 to 35 different groups out here teaching these Marines about safety," said Gunnery Sgt. Bruce Spencer, safety chief, MCCES. "Safety is the main idea behind this fair and I believe it is important, especially for our students to interact with the community."

Being out of the classroom gave the students of MCCES a refreshing learning experience.

"This is a fun experience," said Pfc. Marcus Bains, student, MCCES. "Being able to get out of the traditional classroom and learn is great."

The Safety Fair has been a biannual event for eight years. MCCES will continue to hold this event to promote safety as a priority for young Marines.

Substance abuse prevention representatives provided informational booklets and pamphlets at their booth during the first Behavioral Health Branch Informational Drug Summit, as part of the Drug Demand Reduction Program, at the Officer's Club, Tuesday.

we can sit down with the Marine and find out what happened before he begins shutting everyone out, we can find out when the drug was actually used and more importantly where he purchased it so we can stop the source."

CID also provided information on a new database, which relays to the chief investigator any tests that yield positive results for drug use, which creates more transparency and collaboration on drug investigations.

Classes continued with a chief investigator from NCIS sharing new methods individuals may use to purchase illegal drugs such as hidden websites.

According to special agent Curtis, NCIS, use of the "Dark Web," a collection of websites that sell illegal substances, can lead to service members accessing forms of purchasing drugs that are more difficult to track. Curtis urged senior leadership to stay informed on drug trends and keep track of websites being used to understand the origin of the issue.

"I cannot stress enough, the importance of those urinalysis debriefs once a Marine has [tested positive] for drug use," Curtis said. "Being able to find that source and understand what's happening can help end the drug trends we see."

The summit concluded with an LSST representative describing the process, which takes place after an investigation goes to court martial or ends with punitive documentation from the command. This portion described how proper documentation and statements made during the investigation are crucial to the legal process.

"All parts of the presentation as a whole were really useful and definitely information I will pass on to the regiment and fellow Marines," Walden said.

The informational summit provided leadership with resources and information on changes and initiatives beginning aboard the Combat Center that will allow law enforcement, legal and tenant commands to work together on drug-related incidents.

"I can say that what is special about this base is the amount of teamwork displayed from all the departments," Caguio said. "It was a collaborative effort that we hope to continue."

thousand households from the coming rains.

"We give a roll of plastic sheets to five households and they'll cut it up into twenty foot pieces," said Isaacs. "Then they'll all have a tarp."

To the Osprey crew, this mission was no different than the many other USAID missions they have flown here in Nepal.

"We get requests, and we execute," said Capt. Jason D. Noll, pilot with HMM-262. "It was good, and Samaritan's Purse is easy to work with. It makes you feel fine. It will provide them shelter because all their homes are destroyed out there."

USAID, a U.S. government agency under the State Department, is responsible for administering civilian foreign aid. They have deployed a Disaster Assistance Response Team to the region and are assessing humanitarian needs in cooperation with the Government of Nepal.

JTF 505, embodied by the U.S. Military, are tasked by USAID in support of humanitarian assistance and disaster relief missions.

Samaritan's Purse is a non-government organization, headquartered in Boone, North Carolina, who deployed a disaster response team in Nepal with the mission to provide emergency shelter, food, clean water, medical care, and to meet other urgent needs for victims.

"It made me feel very proud of the Marines and how hard they're working, and also very proud of the United States for our involvement here," said Isaacs.

Institute of Technology with a Master's Degree in Environmental Engineering and Science.

"He found something that he loved," said Maj. Gen. Lewis A. Craparotta, Combat Center Commanding General. "All the people in this room, the Marines and families that he served in Twentynine Palms, are fortunate. In reality he came here and assisted everything in mission assurance. All the awards and accomplishments were earned, not given and he [performed] as a true professional."

Lt. Col. Seaman was also presented with the Meritorious Service Medal for superior performance and leadership during his time with the Mission Assurance Directorate. He contributed to Provost Marshal's Office achieving full accreditation and the Safety Division receiving the 2013 National Safety Council Excellence in Highway Safety Award and Defensive Driving Performance Award. Maintaining readiness for the base was a priority for Seaman, who recognized the commitment of the G7 to safety.

"The importance of the G7 as a whole is that they are your first responders to any emergency," Seaman said. "They have a '24 hours a day, seven days a week,' job. They're always on duty to ensure they promote the health, welfare and safety of all the residents who live aboard the Combat Center."

Approximately 21,000 Marines, sailors and civilians live and work aboard the Combat Center. The G-7 encompasses first responders and sections devoted to ensuring the safety of those patrons, such as the fire and emergency services, security and law enforcement duties, health and safety division, anti-terrorism division, Safety Office, and force protection.

"A good example of how we maintained safety and awareness was through our annual emergency response exercises, like the 'Semper DURUS' Exercise, which tests how quickly different sections would respond to emergencies," Seaman said.

The G7 conducted 10 full scale exercises with Seaman and supported the fight against substance abuse through the national Drug Enforcement Agency's National Prescription Drug Take-Back Program, collecting 25,383 pounds of unwanted prescription. Initiatives like the Community Response Team Training Program also helped improve safety and security throughout the community, adding to the programs Seaman and the G7 provided for the base.

"I'd like to recognize the men and women of the G7 for standing the watch for the benefit of the base and all those who live here," Seaman said. "I'm proud to have served the Combat Center and the United States Marine Corps."

TOUGH MINDED OPTIMISM

by Lou Gerhardt

After more than eight years of writing this column in this newspaper I am able to report that all seems to be going well. I receive good comments almost daily from people who appreciate what I am attempting to accomplish. To put it simply, I want readers to find my columns to be helpful in their effort to maintain a positive attitude each day regardless of circumstances.

When I write about having a positive attitude, I am not suggesting that you should abandon common sense or deny the reality of extremely difficult situations.

Tough minded optimists are not naïve, Pollyannaish, or unrealistic. They "smell the coffee" in every difficulty. They are pragmatic, logical, and extremely practical. On the other hand they have the audacity of hope and a certain belief that something of value may come from any negative experience.

Have hope, dear friends. Tomorrow will be different. Tomorrow you may hear the music, meet the person, read the book, have the insight, think the thought that changes our life in a beautiful way.

Former Secretary of State Colin Powell is a tough minded optimist. It was Powell who said with deep conviction "perpetual optimism is a force multiplier."

Believe it, my friends, and anticipate with optimism tomorrow, next week, and all your days.

Not So Hot

Witherspoon, Vergara comedy a clunky, schlocky misfire

NEIL POND

"Hot Pursuit"
Starring Reese Witherspoon & Sophia Vergara
Directed by Anne Fletcher
Rated R

An uptight, by-the-books Texas policewoman and a sassy, motor-mouth Latina mob wife flee from crooked cops and drug-cartel assassins, leaving a trail of cross-cultural hilarity across the Lone Star State.

That's obviously what was supposed to happen in this odd-couple match-up with Oscar winner Reese Witherspoon and Modern Family TV star Sofia Vergara. And why not? One's short, blonde and Caucasian, the other's tall, brown and Columbian. They start as "enemies" and end as friends. It's a time-tested yuk-yuk template that worked, with various tweaks, in countless other movies.

But it sure doesn't work here. Just about everything is wrong in Hot Pursuit, a clunky misfire that chokes on the fumes of tired lowbrow gags, worn-out stereotypes, shrill slapstick and lazy, predictable, sub-sitcom writing. One reason might be because two TV-sitcom writer-producers, David Feeney (According to Jim, 2 Broke Girls) and John Quaintance (Material Girls, Whitney), came up with the flimsy concoction that passes for a script without bothering to work in anything new, novel or even halfway worthy of the big screen.

Another could be because director Anne Fletcher (The Proposal, The Guilt Trip) doesn't seem to have any idea what to do with her two leading ladies; maybe she was preoccupied planning her next project, the sequel to Disney's Enchanted. Here, she mostly seems to leave her stars stranded to fend for themselves in scenes that require them to scream, screech, make out with each other and crack groan-worthy jokes about lesbians, menstruation and "man parts." In one scene, Witherspoon—literally hops around like a bunny rabbit. In another, she and Vergara disguise themselves in a blanket and a ridiculous fake deer head to elude a police dragnet. In a roadside souvenir shop, we get to see their undies as they try on new outfits, mainly so Vergara, in her form-fitting bra, can make a quip about Witherspoon's frumpy-looking underpants.

A whopping part of the blame has to go to the Vergara and Witherspoon, both of whom are credited as producers of this schlock—which means everyone else was working for them. Ouch.

Vergara's shtick—mangling the English language and parading her voluptuous feminine form—is a big part of Modern Family, and it seems like everyone just wanted to shift her TV character to the screen with a minimum of thought or effort. Witherspoon's done comedy before (Legally Blonde, Election, Four Christmases), but coming off last year's hot Oscar-nominated run producing and starring in Wild, appearing with Joaquin Phoenix in the groovy-wacky Inherent Vice and producing Gone Girl, this feels like a real misalignment of talent, timing and material.

The two leads valiantly manage to coax a few laughs out some of the set-ups, like a ride with a busload of senior citizens that becomes a crazy, three-way interstate shootout. But the best part of the movie is at the end, when outtakes show them flubbing their lines, cracking each other up and apparently having a great time all around making Hot Pursuit.

If only sitting through it was that much fun for the rest of us.

1st Tank Battalion welcomed Palm Vista Elementary School students for a tour of the Tank Ramp, Monday.

The children got the opportunity to experience a 'day in the life' perspective 1st Tanks Marines.

"For a lot of these [children], this will be the first time they have ever been on a military base," said Lt. Col. Lee Rush, battalion commander, 1st Tanks. "Being able to show them what we do is a great way to show the community the human side of the Marine Corps."

The children were split up into three groups and had the opportunity to learn about the different vehicles used by 1st Tanks such as the M1A1 Abrams. The children also used a variation of the Advanced Gunnery Training System simulators and asked the Marines of 1st Tanks questions about the equipment.

"The simulators are the same ones we use to train with," said Master Gunnery Sgt. Steven Heath, operations chief, 1st Tanks. "The only real difference is the ones we generally use are in a box that makes you feel like you are actually in a tank."

While one group experienced the simulators, the others went outside to look at four M1A1 Abrams tanks, an M88A2 Hercules, an ambulance, a Medium Tactical Vehicle Replacement, a Mine Resistant Ambush Protected All-Terrain Vehicle and a Logistics Vehicle System Replacement.

"Most of these [children] have never seen anything like this in real life," Heath said. "It is like Disneyland and SeaWorld mashed up into one for them."

Approximately 30 Marines volunteered to show the students around the vehicles and help with the equipment.

"It's great to be able to do things like this for the school," said Cpl. Matthew Rivera, tank gunner, 1st Tanks. "Showing the [children] around is refreshing and seeing them so excited makes us want to keep doing what we do."

The children had the opportunity to learn from the Marines and see equipment most people never have the opportunity to see.

"Most of these children have seen the Marines come to their class rooms and help their teachers for a day," said Navy Lt. j.g. William Daniel, chaplain, 1st Tanks. "For some of them, these Marines are role models."
