3rd LAR reflects on successes

II MARINE EXPEDITIONARY FORCE (FORWARD)

FORWARD OPERATING BASE PAYNE, Afghanistan – Southern Helmand province used to be a safe haven and stronghold for the insurgency in Afghanistan where the enemy could establish lines of communication and traffic drugs and weapons.

However, the insurgency has been disrupted and forced to find new lines of communication due to Operation Rawhide II. The 3rd Light Armored Reconnaissance Battalion conducted a series of raids, successfully deterring the enemy and breaking its ability to communicate with insurgents in the north, said Capt. Christopher L. Buck, commanding officer for E Company, 3rd LAR, and native of Perry, Mich.

During the raids, 3rd LAR discovered multiple weapons caches, including one in Chotu which consisted of around $54 million in opium, weapons, and improvised explosive device-making material.

Finding caches like this saves lives and ensures that those weapons will not be used here or up north, which is where the insurgents are sending most of their weapons, said Buck.

3rd LAR's presence alone has helped disrupt the movement of the insurgency in the south.

"Gone are the days where the insurgents will go toe-to-toe with Marines in a fight," said 1st Sgt. Tony R. Murchison, E Company first sergeant and native of Raleigh, N.C.

With the Marine presence down here, the insurgency

TWENTYNINE PALMS, Calif. — The Combat Center Band captivated local residents until the sun went down during the Spring Concert Series at Luckie Park Saturday.

The Spring Concert Series is a free annual event spanning several weekends and featuring a different band at each one.

This year featured the musical stylings of Wake the Bard, who specialize in Celtic music; Reflexx, a new wave 80's-style band; the Combat Center Band's concert and brass ensembles, bringing patriotic and Dixieland tunes; and Southbound, who will finish off the series May 7 with their southern rock stylings.

The Combat Center Band is considered a highlight of the series every year and drew a larger-than-anticipated crowd for their performance Saturday, said Robert Geddis, a Twentynine Palms resident.

"I liked them, [the crowd] always likes them," said Sam Smith, an on-air talent on weeknights and a production director with local Z107.7 FM radio station. "We had a really good crowd tonight. It was probably one of the biggest ones they've had so far this year, and the Combat Center Band always brings a big crowd. It is just a staple of what we do out here. We appreciate them."

Halfway through the patriotic-themed performance, the brass band, who call themselves the "Bandini Band," re-energized a somewhat-waning crowd with their Dixieland tunes, even stepping away from the stage and commingling with the crowd as they performed their numbers.

"I always enjoy the Marine Corps Band," said Gordon

New swim qual program changes announced

LANCE CPL. ANDREW D. THORBURN

COMBAT CORRESPONDENT

The Marine Corps updated its water survival qualifications with Marine Corps Order 1500.52D.

The new Marine Corps Water Survival Training Program took effect April 15, and merges the requirements of the previous four Combat Water Survival Qualifications into Beginner, Intermediate and Advanced, levels.

Besides the new classifications system, Marines will notice more changes in what they are required to perform for each level.

"Biggest difference with the new swim qualification is that everything is done in cammies and boots," said Cpl. Douglas McMillan, a combat water safety swimmer at the Combat Center's Training Tank. "There's not one event that you don't have them on, and that is what makes it the most hard for people who used to do just Swim Qualification 4."

Marines will also have to demonstrate they can remove their own flak, Kevlar and rifle while completely submerged. The task must be completed in under 10 seconds in the shallow end of the pool for the Beginner qualification, and in under 20 seconds in the deep end for the Intermediate qualification.

This particular event helps ensure even the weakest of Marine swimmers have the best chance of surviving if they get caught underwater, said McMillan.

"Say you fall into a 10-foot-deep river and sink to the bottom because you have full gear on, and you

Prevent tooth decay: Grab some gum and go

COL. JEFF CHAFFIN, DDS

TRICARE DENTAL CARE BRANCH

An ounce of gum just may prevent a pound of gum disease. It's also healthier and less expensive than replacement teeth.

For example, once a cavity is filled, there is a life-long cycle of replacement of fillings because they only last so long. Poor oral hygiene, such as lack of brushing, flossing and regular dental exams, can lead to root canals, crowns and sometimes extractions. Dental prevention options for beneficiaries include, but are not limited to, sealants, fluoride, diet modification and oral hygiene.

TRICARE beneficiaries should practice good oral hygiene every day with regular brushing and flossing. Visit your dentist regularly for exams and cleanings.

Most beneficiaries do not realize other options can be added to the prevention regimen that will help reduce cavities – such as chewing gum.

According to the Army's "Look for Xylitol First" program, research shows that chewing gum and eating candy that use Xylitol as the sweetener reduces cavity formation. Bacteria in the mouth multiply rapidly when fed by sugar. When you eat, acid is produced in your mouth through the interaction of bacteria (plaque) and food. This metabolic process produces acids that attack the enamel of teeth ultimately causing cavities to form.

Xylitol affects the bacteria associated with dental cavities. Mutans Streptococci, also known as "Strep Mutans" are acid-producing bacteria that attack tooth enamel minerals, which in turn cause tooth decay. Xylitol is ingested by the Strep Mutans just like any other sugar entering the mouth. However, the plaque-producing Strep bacteria are unable to breakdown the Xylitol. This in turn lowers the number and strength of the oral bacteria. With regular use, chewing Xylitol gum three to five times daily for about five minutes, has been shown to reduce cavity rates by between 35-70 percent in cavity-prone patients.

Xylitol is a sugar substitute, low in calories and kills bacteria that lead to tooth decay. It is a natural sweetener that comes from fibrous plant parts, but it does not break down like sugar. Xylitol is approved by the Food and Drug Administration as a sweetener. The cavity-reducing properties are simply a bonus. It contains two-thirds the calories of sugar and is safe for diabetics. For beneficiaries interested in using natural ingredients, Xylitol has the distinction of coming from a plant, and is not chemically manufactured as other sweeteners on the market.

It can be difficult to determine if a product has enough Xylitol to prevent cavity formation. It's best to look at the ingredients list. For chewing gum, when Xylitol appears first in the ingredients list, this is an indication that there is a sufficient therapeutic amount of Xylitol.

Do your part in helping prevent cavities by brushing and flossing daily and reading the ingredients list the next time you shop for chewing gum or mints.

How to recover your security deposit after moving

CAPT. DAVID SEGRAVES

LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICE

Almost every residential rental requires a security deposit of a month's rent or more.

Too often, landlords treat this money as their property. Renters need to know the rules governing security deposits so they can get back as much as possible when their leases end.

Landlords can only deduct certain expenses from a security deposit.

Specifically, security deposits cover unpaid rent, repair of damages during the renter's tenancy, cleaning of the unit to return it to the same level of cleanliness it was in at the inception of the tenancy and to reimburse for any defaults under the lease if the lease specifically states the security deposit can be used for that purpose.

To ensure recovery of the full amount of the security deposit, renters need to take steps beginning when they first move into a unit. First they need to perform a complete walkthrough with the landlord/agent and fill out a discrepancy list. Renters should channel both a crazed gunnery sergeant and the paparazzi during the inspection. A thorough and documented (with date-stamped photos) inspection provides a valuable baseline for damage and cleanliness.

As the end of a lease approaches, renters need to read their lease and provide the appropriate amount of notice to the landlord that they will be vacating the unit. At that time, the renter should request another inspection of the property.

This inspection is an opportunity for a renter to receive an itemized list of possible security deposit deductions while still having time to fix them before the end of the lease. Landlords and renters should agree on the time for these inspections, but they must not be scheduled more than two weeks prior to the end of the lease. Landlords must also provide at least 48 hours of notice before inspection, assuming no other scheduling agreements were made. After receiving the itemized list, renters should compare it to their move-in discrepancy list. If the items are new, the renter should attempt to remedy the issue. Before leaving the unit, renters should perform another personal inspection/walk-through, also with date-stamped photos.

Within 21 days of the termination of a lease, the landlord must either deliver an itemized statement reflecting the security deposit received, any deductions and the amount to be returned to the tenet. The landlord must at that time return any remaining portion of the security deposit. The itemized deductions must include receipts for supplies and services. Landlords can receive an extension on these receipts if the repairs cannot reasonably be performed within 21 days. In that situation, a landlord must provide a good faith estimate of the amounts and fully comply within 14 days of completion of the repairs. If a landlord claims he has not received the bills from a cleaning or repair service, the landlord must provide the name and contact information of the service provider.

If renters dispute the amount deducted from the security deposit, they have a few options.

First, they should carefully look at the items deducted and compare them to their photos of the house and their walkthrough lists. If receipts or contact information are provided for service providers, renters can contact these cleaners/repairers and verify the work done.

After assembling some evidence, renters can send a demand letter to the landlord. The California Courts provide an online tool for writing demand letters at <http://www.courtinfo.ca.gov/selfhelp/smallclaims/secdep/letter.htm>.

If a landlord persists in keeping the security deposit, renters will have to file a claim in small claims court.

In this situation, the Legal Assistance Office can provide support for analyzing a renter's case, writing a demand letter and organizing a case for presentation in small claims court.

Combat Center celebrates Earth Day 2011

LANCE CPL. SARAH DIETZ
COMBAT CORRESPONDENT

Combat Center personnel and members of the Natural Resources and Environmental Affairs office spent all of last week cleaning up the base and raising awareness about being environmentally friendly in honor of Earth Day, which fell on April 22 this year.

The week started off with a Yucca Valley Conservation Fair and Earth Day Celebration April 16, to ensure awareness of the upcoming observation. Members of the NREA set up a booth and passed out information to educate people in town on how the Combat Center community is doing its part to preserve energy, reduce light pollution and protect endangered animals, such as the desert tortoise.

"The fair went really well," said Keith Mohn, the technician specialist with the Combat Center's Environmental Restoration Department. "I was really impressed with the community participation and the broad spectrum of energy that was represented [in different presentations]."

The second major event of the week was the five-kilometer Earth Day Awareness Run held at the installation's physical fitness test course April 20. Runners included Marines, sailors, soldiers, their families and even a few pet pooches.

Units came together to participate in the run. One office topped all others in numbers - the Installation Personnel Administrative Center with 56 Marines.

"It was something we can do to support Earth Day," said Master Sgt. Alejandra Haro, the IPAC staff non-commissioned officer in charge. "We wanted to contribute, and we can't easily get off work to police call. It was for a good cause [and] it was a good run for everybody."

According to Mohn, the run was the perfect way to gather as many Combat Center personnel as possible in support of Earth Day.

"What better way to bring everyone together than [physical training] on a Wednesday morning?," he said.

On the final day, April 22, the NREA set up a booth at the Commissary to educate people about the various ways installation personnel are preserving the environment. They also passed out free bags made of recycled materials to encourage people to recycle and keep the Earth clean.

While the Combat Center celebrates Earth Day every year, its "think green" mentality goes year-round, with proactive pollution prevention and programs. Last year, installation personnel reduced waste in the dining facilities by 93 percent by installing compostable-waste decomposers, and also diverted 90 percent of the cardboard waste on the

'Invisibility' a danger to riders

BOBBY PIIRAINEN

BASE SAFETY

Too often at the scene of a motorcycle accident, the first words out of the car or truck owner is, "Officer, I NEVER saw him!"

This is an unfortunate, but very true statement. But is it always "the other guy's" fault? I would have to say no.

Let's talk about some of the more common places this happens. Too often than not, when I am out riding, I see motorcycles riding directly in the driver's blind spot. This is not only dangerous, but can also become a deadly place to be. In order to be seen while on a motorcycle, we have to make every effort to ensure we aren't invisible to the other vehicle.

When riding behind a car or truck, don't ride dead center behind them. Even though you can see the driver in the rear view mirror, you quickly become part of the scenery to them. Make adjustments in your position as you ride. Ride on the left side of the lane, then switch to the right every minute or so, and continue doing this.

Every time you switch, your headlight shines in that same rear view mirror. But now instead of a steady beam, it catches the driver's eyes as you move, reminding him or her that you are back there.

Also, when traveling in a separate lane, make sure you can see the eyes of the driver in front of you in his or her mirror. Don't make the mistake of staying in a position, so that if that vehicle has to swerve in your direction you won't be able to get out of the way. The best way to accomplish this is to be either completely in front of or behind the vehicle.

When approaching an intersection, or somewhere that allows a vehicle to make a left turn in front of you, you can help make yourself more visible by doing a short, quick swerve in your lane. It can help get the drivers attention and possibly prevent a collision.

Some other ways you can make yourself more visible out there are modulating headlights.

Riding with your high beams on during the day can help as well. And of course reflective clothing is always a good choice.

Just because we ride motorcycles, we can't assume the "other guy" will see us or even be paying attention to anything on the road due to talking on a cell phone, texting, etc.

Always ride defensively and NEVER assume you are seen.

Until next month, keep the rubber side down and the shiny side up. Semper- Moto!

Combat Center welcomes Corps' only bishop during Easter Vigil

STORY AND PHOTOS BY SGT. HEATHER GOLDEN PRESS CHIEF/EDITOR

A guest visit made this year's Easter Vigil even more special for the churchgoing members of the Combat Center community during evening mass at the installation's Catholic Chapel Saturday.

Auxiliary Bishop Neal J. Buckon, the Corps' only bishop who visits here only once a year, presided over the evening service.

The night began with the official lighting of the Easter Candle in a fire pit reserved just for that purpose outside the church's doors. All patrons lit their own individual candles from the one Easter Candle.

The bishop also performed seven baptisms, 12 confirmations, five First Communions and one reception to the Catholic Church, making the evening mass more eventful than usual and one the congregation looks forward to every year.

events which included sack races, a bean bag toss, a bounce house, a game of "Ring Around the Rosie" with students from Bravo Company, Marine Corps Communication-Electronics School, and an obstacle course, which held as much fun for the adults as it did for the kids. Many parents enjoyed watching their loved ones attack the course, weaving in and out of cones with cat-like agility as if they were participating in the National Football League Scouting Combine.

When not participating in physical events, the children were entertained by face-painting clowns. Animals and various superheroes were on many smiling faces. One carnival-goer's measure of the event's success rested on the success of his new disguise. "Of course [he's enjoying himself]; he has Spiderman on his face!," explained the mini-comic book hero's mother, Jeanalin Rehm, who traveled from San Diego for the event.

After three hours, the field's visitors were slowing down and well-earned sweat marks streaked through face paint.

The goal of the carnival was to "give a celebration for the service-members and their children," said Ursula Morales, the event's coordinator.

Judging the numerous amounts of smiles present at the field, one would have to say the mission was accomplished and the day a success.

don't know what to do with cammies, boots, flak jacket, Kevlar and rifle, you have to be able to at least get it all off and stay calm while not being able to breathe," he explained.

With all the new adjustments, McMillan said the instructor team and the pool are there to ensure the Marines' success.

The Training Tank holds "free swim" sessions weekdays from 4 to 7 p.m. and weekends 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Units can also reserve the pool for physical training sessions in the mornings on weekdays.

During all swim hours, the pool will also have water safety instructor on hand to help anyone who needs help to improve their swimming abilities, said Sherry Powell, the aquatics director for the Training Pool.

Inspiring true story hits waves of Hollywood cheese

NEIL POND

AMERICAN PROFILE

"Soul Surfer"

Starring Anna Sophia Robb, Dennis Quaid and Helen Hunt
Rated PG

In 2003, young surfing phenom Bethany Hamilton lost nearly her entire left arm in a shark attack. Doctors said it was a miracle she didn't die from shock and blood loss. The surfing world wondered if Bethany would ever be able to return to the water.

In "Soul Surfer," Anna Sophia Robb, who charmed audiences as a child in "Because Of Winn Dixie" and "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory," plays Bethany as a happy, homeschooled Hawaiian teen who eats, sleeps and breathes surfing.

The opening scenes introduce us to Bethany, her friends and her family, and everyone seems to agree: This girl is going places on a surfboard, possibly even to a world championship.

Then, one otherwise tranquil morning, off the coast of a secluded Hawaiian beach, it happens: A tiger shark breaks the surface of the water and then disappears – and so does Bethany's arm, from the shoulder down.

Bethany's parents are portrayed by Dennis Quaid and Helen Hunt, two veteran actors who, it should be noted, hold their own in body-revealing beach wear surrounded by a cast of much younger forms in bikinis and swim trunks.

Country superstar Carrie Underwood makes a promising movie-acting debut as Bethany's church youth director. Kevin Sorbo, TV's Hercules, is the Hamiltons' close friend and fellow surf junkie, whose quick thinking the day of the attack plays a key role in the outcome of the situation.

Craig T. Nelson plays the surgeon who pronounces Bethany a "living miracle" after surviving an encounter that came just a couple of critical inches away from ending her life.

The movie uses digital special effects to convincingly "remove" Anna Sophia Robb's arm. It's the same technique that made it look like Gary Sinise, as Lt. Dan in Forrest Gump, had no legs.

And the surfing cinematography makes you feel like you're right there in the water, alongside Bethany as she works to adapt to having one less limb for balance and navigation.

But "Soul Surfer" often wipes out on underdog clichés and waves of melodramatic Hollywood cheese. Bethany's surfing rival is a snotty, hiss-able, raven-haired teen who dresses, of course, in all black. Bethany's parents and two older brothers are so one-dimensional (we never know what any of them do outside of their house or the water), they're almost as flat as their surfboards.

Everything is hyper-dramatized with the same jumpy intensity and sweeping music, whether it's a tense moment inside the curl of a big wave or an evasive move by Bethany's dad to steer around a gaggle of reporters in his front yard.

And it's so relentlessly upbeat, there are few "downs" to give the "ups" any elevation. The closest the movie comes to a moment of darkness or doubt is when Bethany snaps off the left arm of her Barbie doll, her despondent reaction to finding out that a much-touted prosthetic limb isn't going to work as well as she'd hoped.

But one thing "Soul Surfer" has going for it, something that will trump most any flaws for many viewers, is its unabashed depiction of Bethany's Christian faith. It's the rare mainstream, big-star movie that doesn't sidestep or marginalize the significance of a character's spirituality.

The movie's faith factor really hits home when Bethany accompanies her youth group on a mission trip to tsunami-ravaged Thailand, where she realizes a "higher calling," a spiritual synthesis of her soul and her surfing.

You always wonder how closely based-on-a-true-story movies follow the real events they're supposedly depicting. Stay for the credits, and you'll see how many of the scenes match up, almost exactly, to moments captured in some of the Hamiltons' home videos.

"Soul Surfer" won't wash ashore any Oscars. But if you're looking to catch a wholesome wave about a young woman's remarkable, real-life recovery from a horrific setback, it'll take you for an inspiring ride.

Desert Detours: Gone fishing at Hemet Lake, Calif.

Welcome to "Desert Detours," a series that follows correspondent Cpl. M.C. Nerl around on his explorations of the high desert, the basin and the valley. The "out-of-five" palm tree rating scale offers a glance at how worthwhile the writer considers a place to be. Locales will be judged on their accessibility, atmosphere, fun, cost and facilities. Keep an eye out every week for new shenanigans and hot tips on cool things to do.

COMBAT CORRESPONDENT

LAKE HEMET, Calif. – Fishing is a time-honored tradition among men.

Lake Hemet, Calif., located less than an hour from Idyllwild, Calif., is known both for its scenery and fishing opportunities.

Also, let it be known, the limited number of camping spots are first-come-first-serve, as is their selection of small, motorized and rowing boats available for rent.

A handy bit of information for any Marine, sailor or their families wanting to go there is this: make sure it's a payday weekend, because being in California costs a pretty penny.

It's $20 for one night of camping, in a crowded place. This is not what we call "camping" back in the Midwest. Here, you're surrounded by people driving BMWs and massive trailers, and the campsites are all inches away from one another. Thank God there are quiet hours, or nobody would get any sleep.

Here's the real kicker – even though they do rent boats, it costs roughly $80 for a single day. You get 20 of those dollars back, as the security deposit. But seriously, for as slow and little as they are, I find $80 to be a little much.

Luckily for Marines, camping, fishing, boating and man time are all team sports.

So, grab a few friends, split the cost of the rental, and 80 bucks is nothing. Plus, you can take the $20 deposit, buy some beer and shore fish afterwards. Absolutely save the alcohol for after you turn in the keys though, because drinking and driving laws still apply when operating any vehicle, including watercraft.

You probably wondered where all the photos of the fish are, seeing as I am writing a story about fishing.

No fish were caught by yours truly because there are five points in the lake where they stock and feed fish, and I was at none of these places.

My bad. Sorry. At least we aren't in caveman times, where my survival depended on fishing, and I don't have a family to feed. It kind of feels like an epic fail, but oh well, that's what diners and Applebee's are for.

Other than that, though, the whole experience wasn't a bad one. Idyllwild is close by, and cell phone service is still available in some areas around the lake, although I prefer it the other way around. Man time requires peace and quiet.

Lake Hemet, Calif., is located several miles from Idyllwild, Calif., and is known for its fishing, scenery and camping. Be warned, however, such an expedition is best carried out on a payday weekend.

Overall, the lake, despite my poor fishing ability, earned four out of five palm trees. Just don't be the one who goes up there, acts crazy, causes problems and ruins it for the rest of us, because the area and its residents are quite military friendly.

Editor's Note: "Desert Detours" is a weekly series exploring opportunities for Marines and sailors from a firsthand perspective. All material included therein is the opinion of the writer and does not imply an endorsement by the U.S. Marine Corps or the Department of Defense.

It's an extra $80 to rent a motorboat vice a rowboat at the lake. Don't worry, you get a $20 refund for returning the boat in one piece.

Lake Hemet, Calif., is known to many fishermen and vacationers throughout southern California for amazing fishing opportunities. There are multiple spots around the lake where they stock and feed fish. Unfortunately, I did not go to any of these places. I hope the gentlemen in these two boats did.

Corporal Steven Afalla, the legal assistant non-commissioned officer-in-charge at the Combat Center's Staff Judge Advocate, searches for a seemingly non-existent fish in Lake Hemet, Calif., Saturday. Shore fishing, as demonstrated here, is a great way to legally drink a lot of beer, whilst fishing, a combo prohibited while operating a boat.

have to them.”
The children’s days were filled with drills that strengthened their endurance, agility, strength and focus. The players also taught them techniques such as how to run, when to crouch and how to brace for impact, as well as how and when to go on the offensive.

“It’s amazing they came out here,” said Andie Skillings, mother of a camp participant. “The kids really look up to them, and they are learning a lot about teamwork, skills, and sportsmanship. Plus, we are Bears fans so we are pretty excited that Charles Tillman is out here.”

The players said they also hoped the three-day camp and their time together would encourage the kids to dream big

“If a kid can see someone who has made it, it inspires them to stick with it and know they can do it, too,” Tillman said.
Larrimore echoed the sentiment.
“If they see that I started as a kid, it lets them know that they can make it,” he said.

During their stay, the players also toured the base and visited the Wounded Warriors and Marines and sailors in Camp Wilson. They even got a taste of the combat convoy simulator, where they defended their humvee from virtual terrorists.
“I’ve found a new respect for these guys,” Larrimore said, referring to Marines. “I really appreciate everything they do.”
Tillman said he grew up in a military family and being back on a base was refreshing.
“My dad spent 20 years in the military and my father-in-law did 30,” he said. “It brings back a lot of memories. It’s my first time being around so many Marines, it’s been great.”

give our guys the opportunity to become part of the world team,” said Mark Geletko, the team’s coach and manager. “If they do get on the team, they would then go to Serbia for the world championship.”

The team of four fighters arrived with high expectations for the tournament and themselves. Other teams in the competition, like the Camp Pendleton team, had rosters of more than 10 fighters.

“There are a lot of teams here,” said Mario Martinez, a Arlington, Va., native, and a Fight Club 29 fighter in the 175-pound bracket.

Despite the fierce competition, the fighters said they all appreciated the talent present.

“These kids do fight well,” Martinez said. “You can learn a lot from them.”

All the teams had a wide array of chances to collect points toward their overall standing. Along with winning individual matches, ending a match early got the teams higher in the standings, above just a normal victory.

Ethan Surrusco, a Fight Club 29 member who is currently injured, supported his team from the sidelines, saying the tight-knit group recognizes each others’ strengths and really functions as a team.

Through their combined efforts, the team overcame the handicap of having only four fighters to come in second place overall in the tournament.

Martinez took home silver, while Vince Peak and Edwin Nuñez earned bronze medals.

The team’s three medalists also earned the chance to try out for the national team in Las Vegas June 26.

Fight Club 29 is currently gearing up for the U.S. Armed Forces Pankration Championship May 21, also at Camp Pendleton, where they hope to enter eight fighters and take another jab at gaining national try-out qualifications.
