STORY BY LANCE CPL. MELANY VASQUEZ

Marine Unmanned Aerial Vehicle Squadron 4 prepared the RQ-7B Shadow Unmanned Aircraft System for its final flight during Exercise Steel Knight aboard the Combat Center, Dec. 11.

Steel Knight is an annual exercise led by 1st Marine Division that combines air and ground assets to complete a wide range of military operations focusing on ground fires, maneuver warfare tactics, and command and control capabilities.

“The flight was our last of the evolution for Steel Knight and also our last Shadow flight in the Marine Corps,” said Capt. Shanna Ream, an operations officer for VMU-4, Marine Aircraft Group 41, 4th Marine Aircraft Wing, Marine Forces Reserve. “We have been flying the Shadow for a very long time, it is a system that we employed to Iraq and Afghanistan. It has a lot of capabilities and it’s been in the fight for a long time.”

For over five years with the unit, the Shadow has been operated by two enlisted Marines through the use of a computer system or a

Christmas...1966

Christmas means different thing to different people. A lot depends on where we are. Many of us are fortunate this Christmas to be with family and friends. Many of us are far away from home on this, the happiest of holidays.

But there's one thing about Christmas — its spirit is so infectious no one except a modern-day Scrooge can hide from it.

Under normal conditions, we know Christmas as a day for carolers, holly, poinsettia and mistletoe. We know it as a family day of feasting and exchange of gifts. More important, however, we know it as the day hearts are gladdened and spirits are lifted.

We need not be in the comfort of our home to be filled with the spirit of Christmas. It happens everywhere, to everyone.

WHAT I'VE LEARNED

Stephen

Walla Walla, Wash. Staff Sergeant, legal chief, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Headquarters Battalion

COOK

>I'm from Walla Walla, Washington. It's a small town, I believe the population was 38,000 people when I was growing up.

>I have two brothers and one sister who I grew up with. I'm the oldest child and there isn't exactly a huge difference in age between us.

>I grew up very close with my brother, who is right under me. My brother and I played a lot of sports and participated in a lot of after school activities, so the amount of time we spent at home was very limited.

>I played a year of football but my main sports were baseball and basketball up until my first year of high school. After that I ran track, which was probably the sport I was best at, but I enjoyed playing baseball the most.

>I got to play baseball with my brother and two of my cousins. The three of us were always on the same team. Growing up, we didn't have a lot of money so a charitable program would pay for our gear. I started out as a pitcher then played as first base and pitcher. There was one year where we didn't have a lot of fast runners so I was placed in the outfield and center field and that's where I stayed.

>Besides my father and mother's generation, every generation before them had a substantial amount of people who served in the military. My grandma was a military brat and even though she didn't serve actively I would definitely consider her a military member because of the way she lived and conducted her life.

>Growing up, I was very close to my grandmother and grandfather. They had a homestead, so if we weren't spending time in the trailer we spent it at the homestead. At the homestead they had livestock, small patches of fruit and vegetables, two apple trees, a bunch of chickens and llamas.

>It was absolutely wonderful. My most vibrant memories are from the homestead. I even got married there.

>My grandfather was a Marine. He served in the Vietnam War. While he was there he wrote two different types of letters whenever he wrote home. One was to his mom saying everything was fine and then one was to his dad explaining what was actually happening.

>My grandfather was a huge influence in my life. As a child I remember growing up sitting on his lap in the house at the homestead watching the history channel. I'm the oldest grandchild so I knew if I joined I would be the first to start the tradition back up. My grandparents were very patriotic so growing up it wasn't until I was a bit older that I learned it wasn't a requirement to join the military. When I found out that wasn't true I still wanted to start the tradition back up and join the Marine Corps. As good of a person as my grandfather was, I figured if he joined it must've been a good place.

>I've been in the Corps for nearly 8 years and I would like to stay the full 20.

>I did take the [non commissioned officer] creed to heart and one specific part of that is to train the new and influence the old. I think my favorite thing about being a Marine is being able to do that.

>My favorite thing about the Marine Corps has changed many times, because of time and rank. Now, as a staff NCO I have to say the best thing in the Marine Corps for me is having an influence on both the new and the old Marines.

>On MarineNet there was a course that teaches you how to listen better. I would have to say that had a very huge impact on my life. A lot of it is quite obvious but I truly took it to heart and it had a very big impact on my life.

>The first thing I ask any of my Marines, regardless of rank, is what their hobbies are. Hobbies are my favorite thing. I am a huge advocate and I will lose much sleep over my hobbies. I like making things. If it's make-able or breakable that's my thing.

>I've got a 3D printer at home, which has really helped me out on a personal and Marine Corps level. I made a prosthetic arm for my little brother and I made an action figure of my previous [officer in charge] for his farewell gift. I got a photo of the front and side of his face and I modeled him on the computer then printed it off, and gave him his own action figure.

>What got me started in 3D printing was a remote controlled submarine with a live feed camera. You can't get one for about $5,000 and I thought that was ridiculous so I decided to build my own. When I first started building it I was using the things that are in my house and it was getting very agitating. My first design had an old diaper dispenser as the main hull of the submarine. But then I designed one on the computer and bought the pieces for it. Altogether it cost just under 100 dollars. That cost included the battery pack, all of the controls and a little screen for it.

>I also develop video games and apps. I attempted to make a cartoon but it was too time intensive for what I was already doing. Now I'm completing my first class for a degree in computer science and programming so I have the proof to back up my knowledge.

>My step-dad, the person I call dad, made working with my hands a thing for me. We were always doing something. Whether it was working on, making or building vehicles.

>He worked at a chicken factory and on the weekends he would let me go me than it does to others. Memorizing it is the key for me. I played the clarinet, the flute, the trombone, the harmonica and the piano. I also play a few songs on the violin but I can't read the music.

COOK ENJOYS 3D PRINTING. HE IS CURRENTLY IN THE PROCESS OF MAKING A MINIATURE V8 ENGINE THAT WILL LATER BE USED IN A BAT MOBILE FOR HIS 4-YEAR-OLD SON.

>While making video games I make riffs, and background music. I absolutely love the free choice of being able to do what I would like to do.

>I don't receive any monetary compensation for the things I create. I hope to have a maker's shop that would allow me to help others bring their inventions to life. And for a reasonable price, just over the price of the materials.

>I love science. There's a lot of it that is unknown and I think that's what I like about it. Everyone's an inventor. Whether they've thought about it or not if you sit down with someone and ask what would make their life better, they'll come up with something.

>As I like to tell people, I may have all these things and technology is convenient, but it's a thing. I'd be fine without it.

>My grandmother taught me not to value material things. As a child I remember leaving a parking lot with my grandmother and as we're pulling out there was an individual asking for money. It was quite obvious what he was going to use that money for but my grandmother still pulled over and gave him all the money in her pocket. She told me it doesn't matter what they are going to use it for, if they're asking for it you always give help.

>My mom always taught us to leave things better than how we found them. We would go to rivers and swim in them but they were being closed down at a frequent rate because people weren't cleaning up after themselves. So we'd go and she kept telling us to pick up other people's trash and as kids we were pissed off. I understand now. It means a lot that my grandmother and mom instilled certain values in me.

>If I had to give advice to someone it would be, in the words of Joe Dirt, life's a garden dig it.

remote control system.

"It's been very reliable and it has a lot of capabilities," Ream said. "For example, we could physically launch and recover an aircraft from one spot and then task it off and fly it out."

Through skillful use of the Shadow's capabilities, VMU-4 was able to effectively support the active duty component throughout Steel Knight. The capabilities include sustained flight times of six to nine hours, depending if the drone is the short wing or the long wing model, and flying out 25 kilometers with a speed of about 90 knots.

"For most of our missions with the Shadow, we did a lot of control of indirect fire," Ream said. "We participated in close air support, aerial escort, and then we did expedition operations, which is where we used our remote control."

The Shadow is an Army owned product leased by the Marine Corps. The Marine Corps is currently phasing out the Shadow and upgrading to the RQ-21A Blackjack system, which is a Marine Corps owned product.

The Blackjack will provide day and night intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance coverage in real time. It can fly up to 16 hours, is eight feet long, and will include day and night full motion video cameras, infrared markers, laser range finders, a communications relay package and automatic identification system receivers.

The Marine Corps completed its first land based operational deployment for the system in September 2014. After several test runs and operations, the Marine Corps is ready to begin training on the RQ-21A Blackjack in March 2018.

"The RQ-21A Blackjack is going to bring a lot of capabilities for us to the fight," Ream said. "Because of its upgraded features, we will have a smaller footprint than we did with the Shadow, and we couldn't be more excited for it."

CPL. CHRISTIAN LOPEZ

Cpl. Isaiah Nelson, heavy equipment operator, Marine Wing Support Squadron 374, reaches a new personal record of a 550-pound deadlift to help secure first place during the Iron Rhino weightlifting competition at Del Valle High Intensity Tactical Training field aboard the Combat Center, Dec. 13. The Iron Rhino event was the first weightlifting competition hosted by MWSS-374 where competitors had three attempts to reach their maximum deadlift, bench, and squat, to claim the title of Iron Rhino.

Marines test their strength in first ever Iron Rhino competition

STORY BY LANCE
 CPL. ISAAC CANTRELL

Marines with Marine Wing Support Squadron 374 competed for the title of Iron Rhino during a weight-lifting competition at the Del Valle High Intensity Tactical Training field aboard the Combat Center, Dec. 13.

The Iron Rhino event was a contest in which each competitor had three attempts to hit their max weights for deadlift, squat and bench press. The competitor with the highest-overall cumulative score became the Iron Rhino and won the trophy, said 2nd Lt. Brock Turner, communications officer in training, MWSS-374.

"The Iron Rhino was a great opportunity to bring the unit together and foster unit cohesion and esprit de corps," Turner said. "Events like this are important because they push Marines to be the best versions of themselves."

28 competitors took part in the event but only one could earn the title of Iron Rhino. At the end of the event the person to walk away with the title was Cpl. Isaiah Nelson, heavy equipment operator, MWSS-374.

According to Nelson, he began preparing for the event as soon as he heard about it and even began researching training methods to implement in his workouts. His hard work paid off, and Nelson ended the event with a cumulative score of 1,300 pounds, maxing out at 550 pounds on his deadlift alone.

"It was a tough competition because there were a lot of people who came close to beating me," Nelson said. "It was a lot of fun though; it was a great contest and I couldn't be happier with my win."

According to Turner, the Iron Rhino will become an annual event. As this was MWSS-374's first time hosting the competition, the unit hopes to bolster their attendance in coming years, even considering opening the event to Marines from other units.

"I love seeing our Marines get passionate," Turner said. "Marines are always trying to be the fittest versions of themselves, so giving them the opportunity to showcase their strength is great."

Solid Waste Characterization Study

In April of this year, Environmental Affairs (EA) conducted a Waste Characterization Study in an effort to better understand the amount and source of recyclable materials entering the Combat Center's landfill. The study was conducted at the Residential Commercial Recycling Section (RCRS) located on the corner of Rifle Range Road and Del Valle, a facility dedicated to processing recyclable materials. Not only is recycling required by Base and Marine Corps policies, but proceeds from the sale of recyclable materials fund RCRS operational costs as well as morale, welfare, and recreation activities.

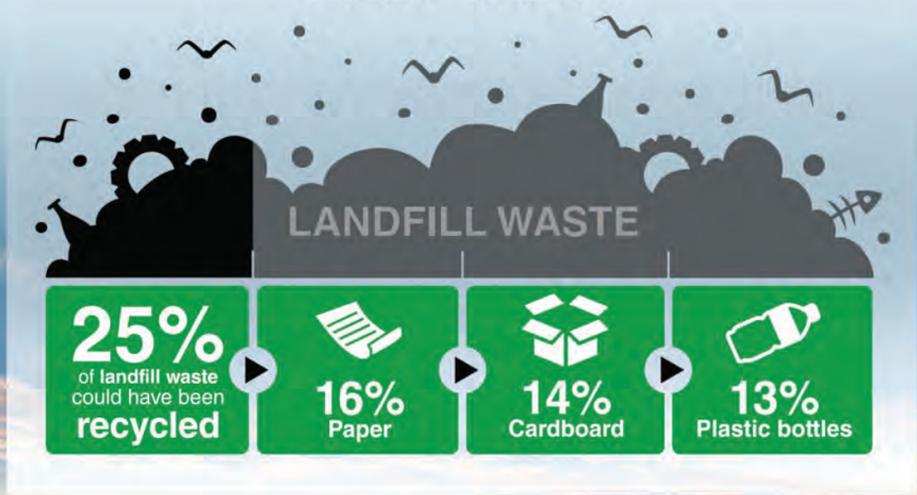

In large part, the Combat Center relies on individual military, civilian, and residential customers to have the knowledge to identify and separate recyclable materials when depositing waste in dumpsters and other solid waste containers. Despite the efforts of Base personnel, Marines, and residents, large amounts of recyclable materials still enter our landfill. In the course of the study, waste from 100 dumpsters and four residential areas was sorted, representing over 24 tons of waste. In addition, personnel from 60 different facilities were surveyed to gather customer feedback and identify necessary improvements to the recycling program.

The study found that approximately 25% of waste going to our landfill could have been recycled. These items included large amounts of paper (16% of recyclables), cardboard (14% of recyclables), and CRV plastic bottles (13% of recyclables). The study also found that the residential areas participate in the recycling program more than non-residential areas of the Combat Center: only 16% of the residential trash was recyclable, compared to 28% of trash collected from non-residential facilities.

Certain items cannot be put in our landfill, such as hazardous waste, medical waste, and range residue/munitions. However, restricted waste was found in 86% of the dumpsters and all four residential areas, including items such as aerosol cans, e-waste, rechargeable batteries, munitions, medications, and unused MRE heaters.

The study provided several recommendations, including adding recycling containers at several buildings, additional outreach and training, and color-coding dumpsters for ease of use.

LANDFILL STUDY RESULTS

For more information about MCAGCC's recycling program and how you can better recycle, contact RCRS at (760) 830-5666 or visit <https://www.green29.org/>.
